

G. Gervaise (Gerry) Davis III is the founding principal of the law firm of Davis & Schroeder, P.C., located in Monterey, California, just outside Silicon Valley. Gerry graduated from Georgetown School of Foreign Service and then Georgetown Law School and spent his first year as a law clerk with Judge Stanley Barnes on the Ninth Circuit Federal Court of Appeals in Los Angeles in 1958. After a brief stint with a firm in San Francisco, he moved to Monterey where he lives and practices business and intellectual property law. As early as 1968, he was working with small software companies and on high-tech development projects, which he continues to do. He authored a book on software protection that was published in 1985 and since 1983 has been speaking extensively both nationally and internationally on matters related to computers, software, hardware, and the Internet.

Gerry is an Adjunct Professor at Santa Clara Law School where he teaches courses on intellectual property and Internet related matters. He has been a member of the Computer Law Association since 1976 and a Director of it for many years, as well as Webmaster of the CLA web site. During the past four years, he has been deeply involved in domain name disputes serving WIPO as a domain name dispute arbitrator and serving National Arbitration Forum as an arbitrator in both domain name disputes and general arbitration as well as representing clients before both organizations in domain name disputes. He continues to speak and write on intellectual property law subjects all over the world.